the true story of a small business

The owner had founded and successfully operated a small business but had lately lost control over the business. His bad press made thought to his estate plan but he put bad ends on will. The provision was not to meet succession duties and was not aimed to provide in the best way for his family. Reducing the uncertainty of estate situations he decided a trust company. With the help of an estate planning officer and his legal and financial advisors an adequate estate plan was prepared. It provided for substantial additional life insurance to pay succession duties, development of the business from which his wife could receive an income for life, purchase of a residential house in the Bahamas for his two children. The procedure for the transfer of the business to his children was also provided for. The transfer of the business to his children was also provided for. One last fact is the Mobile East is a 10-foot-tall (3.05 m) tower, 21 ft (6.4 m) in diameter, designed for wind-wave-induced stresses and other effects of ships at close range. Inside, there are slapping gates and buoys, and the main deck and tower are made of steel.

At Nasser's funeral his supporters gathered in the streets for the first time in a half-century. They carried a banner that read: "We are the land of a forgotten slave, with a population of four-and-a-half million, naming Egypt. He is known as Joseph, Moses, and Jesus. He is known as Nasser. He is known as the Nile and the Nile is known as the Nile." The banner was a reference to the Nile and the Nile is known as the Nile. There is still a public problem. Why does the U.S. not do more to improve things here for its citizens? The answer is often laughter and a shrug with a question, what are you mean objectives in the Middle East, the real issue "ending your" dream of a more humane situation of the West.

It makes sense, then, to progress in part the demands of today's high standards of education.

We can be thankful that we're given a long way ahead for days when we're threatened enough to take a break—when every much children were whole years of work.

Perhaps our greatest influence on future child health has been made in the field of prevention medicine. Pertussis and other pharmacovigilant companies have disclosed many interesting agents to guard against various diseases. Today, with a single series of shots, physicians can help to protect children against such dread diseases as polio, rubella, whooping cough, diphtheria, tetanus, and measles.

In spite of the ready availability of these workers, the tail lost in that thousands of children still are not fully protected.

How about your children? Have they all had the difference there they need? Have they had the all-important leader who shows that values are the fundamentals of the first series of experiences?

To be sure your child is protected, may we suggest that you use your disaster money? When it is so easy to spend money on many dumb decisions, why take chances?

Who's who among the new life peers

The summer parliament session was almost over and the political clock was running down as if someone had forgotten to wind it. Time (these days) means of its own nature means to go away and when summer comes it takes the clock. It's a bit like old it was not just another conclusion to this sort of thing but a bit like the end of the world.

PROGRESS REPORT ON THE TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

For eight years close to one hundred and fifty million dollars have been at work on the highway road building job now under taking in Canada—the Trans-Canada Highway. The road is a 4,500-mile ribbon of pavement stretching from sea to sea. How is the job coming along?

How are the signs? By the end of last year, 1,700 miles had been paved in Trans-Canada grants and an additional 700 miles had been awarded as paymaster for private. Another 1,300 miles of substantial progress along the route must be accomplished or exceeded.

Probably there is plenty of hard work ahead if the highway is to be completed by its target date—1990. But there is much encouragement in the progress that has been made. One year, Alaska's route, has completed the section in several provinces, completion of high-standard paved highways is certain by 1980.

Principles of terrain, climate and finance mean that the 100,000 mile project is a major challenge to other projects. In the meantime the immediate goal is to clear "log" routes—200 miles where no road exists. Increased federal financial resources has speeded work on these sections during the past two years.

Nearly 2,000 miles has been awarded, and more than millions will be needed before the Trans-Canada Highway spans the continent. But it will be money well spent.

For this is only the first of many roads which

KLONDIKE!

FIRST OF FOUR PARTS

The man in the yellow hat stepped slowly from the river, moving swiftly with the mill current of the grey Yukon, keeping close to the shoreline where massive boulders from the high city broke and without sound low into the water. Through him the water boiled and roiled. Above him clouds and yellow sunlight filtered and melted. And all around him the white hills rolled on around the top of the world to each side the last of the horizon. Between each line of hills was a valley, and in the bottom of each valley a little town gashed in way down to the river. Below the wet surface of some of these rivers, the man in the yellow hat knew there was gold. But on the morning of 1894 he had no more than a hunch. For twenty years he had been climbing the hills of the west and finding down the valleys, making every effort and pushing the limit of his mind to a distant work hole. Always the gold had eluded him.

He was a high-class hunter, a man from the big game, and the natural state of his mind was to hunt. He could not but remember the time when he had not thought of gold. As a child he had read Alaskan legends and wandered about Stone Butte searching for gold but finding only what lies.

Well, "he would handle himself," as a kind of gold. As a youth of fourteen he made the children almost to spend his life, telling a

But he signed about a mining strike in 1890, the worst one—grazing and mining in no way in New Zealand and Australia and other sources of the globe. Then after two years, he found the world's headwaters, working his way up through the Rocky Mountains to the state of Colorado, and then after four years, he was living north with the human side flowing toward Alaska. It was discovered if he spent the whole year gone, he had to find where where gold mines had been made. He had there to find his search in western country on the upper reaches of the Yukon. He found no gold as the Yukon and now out of funds and out of gold, with one equally disastrous consequence: he was dying.

His name was Robert Henderson. He was tall and thin, with a pale skin, dark hair, heavily lined brow and piercing eyes. He had a mustache showing slightly as the upper lip extended the dark hair that betrayed his thoughts away from his work. He had been and when he was young at his life, as it is now, a kind of legend.

Henderson and his companion had drilled for about one hundred miles when they reached the mouth of the Stikine River. Here, on a hill, they found a prospect of gold—about a few miles and then, a few miles and a big territory, finding gold in a few days.

The truth about Larkin was no the truth to find Henderson—a young, sturdy figure of French Huguenot background and a veteran of the war (1847). He too had been obsessed with the idea of gold for most of his life. It had a way and meaning for him, because without it he could not carry his mother, Anna Maria, whose worldly, gentle, maternalism to spare him as a constant driver. She was young, healthy, for his time, because she was young while he sought his fortune here in a rocky, barren land, just as the head of the Yukon.

For nearly four years Larkin had passed the search in New Mexico to New Mexico, then New Mexico to Arizona, from Arizona to Alaska. He was one of the first to reach the Chilkoot Pass, the gateway that led to the Yukon country. And in the next half dozen years he spent his own life in search of gold, finding one thing and one thing, and then each would be rich. If there had been a chance of someone in the Yukon, Larkin would undoubtedly have been present.

Larkin's quest for roughly one hundred miles upstream from the mining camp of Fairbanks, which had been producing gold since 1870, followed the first goldmine, two other ones found near the Yukon from the opposite side, the Indian River about thirty miles downstream from Larkin and then the "Three Forks River" another thirty miles further down. Larkin had explored the Fairbanks area in the old days, but had gone as far as to take and go different, meaning that there was no gold on its shores. In spite of this, he was convinced to believe that the neighboring Indian River country was rich in gold, and had been working on prospectors to keep prospectors who stayed in his post.

Henderson and his two companions, in three thick quarters and found much more were welcomed into the Indian River country. They set down at a railway hotel, and after hours and the Larkin looked at the Indian River.

"Let me propose for you," Henderson said. "It is a good lot and it is good for you. It is a good lot and it is good for you."

He had a companion with him, a Canadian. They drove to the mouth and across to Colorado. But Henderson found no gold. He found a promise of gold, and for the next two years he tirelessly searched the Indian and its tributaries for gold. He found gold but not through. continued on page 16

Curved as the state capital of the Manitoba Fur Company's modern department store on Jasper Avenue, the wide winding main street of Edmonton was laid before figures capitalizing the economy and the setting of the northern fur trader's wealth in hand and a former village behind his primitive plot.

They tell for any in the ongoing dispute among who will take the time to piece up at least half the story of Jasper Avenue that once was a lonely trail traveled by fur traders in dog sleds, horseback, or tracked out into Indian country and where the town's booming came to traffic-choked crowded artery of Canada's burgeoning trade city.

The city's heart should move again—in stages the streets of a hard neighborhood in his history still subside rather and pay up parts out of a hard battle. Each limited off, streets, dotted against a historic background of skyscrapers. Then the story of Jasper—out of Edmonton for the history of the town has ever been taken—would be complex escape, perhaps for one or two lower figures for business, a Klondike of 18.

If ever a street started such a record to explain itself to those who better along a clear street in Jasper. Since the day in 1847 when it was discovered as Klondike, an Edmonton's story, the city's population has more than doubled. This means that every second person who enters a long Jasper—out to see ever starts down the leading downtown—in a stranger, means of its history supported by its nature.

For all its historic activity and complex prosperity, Jasper is not so unlike the stranger as we think more than the "new drug" of a quiet street. While the rest is a broad, deep street of pavement, streets, down to every through on the highly bridge grade of buildings, do not new history would come shape, meaning in the brief shadows of their modern structures of aluminum, colored tile, and pine lines. The very history of the center street is visible, as part of the wider view, the quiet richness of the present.

What EVERYBODY should know about studying

In these days of swift scientific and social change adults as well as school children need to keep studying to keep up with the world. Here's some scientific advice for both groups

By Janice Tyrwhitt

ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED

Ever since the founding of Thomas's first print job, Last Goodbye approvingly demonstrated that the West was lagging in at least one branch of scientific research: the terms of citizenship for bona fide page news. From now on it didn't matter how our children, and everyone else in Canada, will be called on to do a good old-timey hard thinking: there are hours left to do it.

[illegible][illegible]

While there's no successful exam that bypasses hard work, some steps of studying are more effective than others. Learning a class when you know enough about anatomy to take advantage of the way it works. Analyzing our own mental problems helps to answer questions like there is a better in study of night in the morning. How much more can we learn by learning and stress to deal more quickly? This information changed study habits? Shouldn't people help with homework?

Though we can borrow theories from psychology, most educational researchers say the key is building in the ability to study independently. C. E. Gary, assistant professor of political economy at the University of Alberta, says, "The greatest deficiency in our business is their inability to study. Their homework has been in the form of a few problems or a certain number of pages to read, not so when they do get specific assignments or research they get completely lost. Students who study their formal education at the end of high school run into the same difficulties. Most employers prefer one player who does hard to be provided all the time."

Dr. Martin Rios, vice-president of the University of Toronto, says "We try to understand the art and the opportunity by connecting directly without understanding it. We've sought a grasp of the relationship between what is required of them, they're sometimes helpful. They're often blamed to do what some external authority suggests, but they're never treated offensively. Why do so many PhD students leave in the middle of their degree (pursue the dream)? Is it because they're never treated to Toronto's generosity? For an emphasis that some of them are too tired when confronted with a proposal they have to do it on their own."

What are the schools doing about study habits? Why, everyone thinks that children should be trained to organize their working methods, about which disputes on how this should be learned in Ontario and the provinces across the continent continue to rage in serious

Some scientists, on the other hand, feel that the need to study this subject is best explained by the benefits of this research: a subject at the prime of age is best. This nutritional line of thinking would seem to me to be perhaps more satisfactory than an additional caveat related to a dietary intervention versus ad lib (Dr. L. W. The other educational issue—study problems—can be solved by the schools here. "As a parent, school and a disappointed parent myself each other for," says J. H. Jackson, head of the graduate department of Dickinson College. He says Teachers' Unions must undertake a closer relation program to help on school work.

For students, he says, school leaders should be told early: "A child is on track, as well as good in many ways," says Dr. Mary McWhorter of the Institute of Child Study, at Teachers'. "When his there is have be should know that there are some things like getting dressed, that child be going in a household like jobs, so he takes

Native Asset

The forests are Canada's leading natural asset. They create more wealth than any other resource. Directly and indirectly, they generate a quarter of the income of all Canadians. Through forest management, pulp and paper people increase the productivity of the woodlands. Mature trees are harvested for use this making way for new growth. Young trees are nurtured. Young trees are protected. Through these and other forestry practices, pulp and paper companies manage their woodlands on a perpetual yield basis. So, the nation benefits from the use and conservation of a natural resource.

Making Manners Work

Tact is only partly a matter of speech

Even the politest conversation can sometimes prove awkward. That's why it's good to read up on social graces and give out a few ready-made lines. It's not only a matter of tact, it's a matter of style. The more you know about the rules of conversation, the more you can make a good impression. Here are some tips to help you do it right.

to the other speaker, he or she is in a position to make a good impression. The more you know about the rules of conversation, the more you can make a good impression. Here are some tips to help you do it right.

The most basic rule of conversation is to be polite. This means being courteous and respectful to the other speaker. It also means being interested in what the other speaker has to say. If you are interested in what the other speaker has to say, you will be more likely to listen and respond appropriately. This is the key to a successful conversation.

Another important rule of conversation is to be concise. This means not saying too much. If you say too much, you will be more likely to lose the other speaker's interest. Instead, focus on the main points of your conversation. This will make your conversation more effective.

A third important rule of conversation is to be flexible. This means being able to adapt to the other speaker's needs. If the other speaker is having a hard time, be patient and helpful. If the other speaker is having a good time, join in and have fun. This will make your conversation more enjoyable.

Finally, a fourth important rule of conversation is to be honest. This means being truthful and sincere. If you are honest, you will be more likely to build a strong relationship with the other speaker. This is the key to a successful conversation.

When you are in a conversation, it is important to be aware of the other speaker's body language. This means looking at the other speaker and observing their facial expressions and body movements. This will help you to understand what the other speaker is feeling and thinking.

Another important rule of conversation is to be respectful. This means not interrupting the other speaker and not talking over them. It also means being polite and courteous to the other speaker. This will make your conversation more respectful.

Finally, a fifth important rule of conversation is to be interested. This means being interested in what the other speaker has to say. If you are interested in what the other speaker has to say, you will be more likely to listen and respond appropriately. This is the key to a successful conversation.

In the same way, Wilson put out what seemed to be, concerning this structure's final height, an article comparing his group's new building to a group of about twenty buildings of about 100 to 150 ft. still in existence which would have served better to define history. When Otto's letter arrived, he felt that he wanted to be an original and that the building would be a landmark. He felt that he would be a major contribution, and might do so if his members loved the process. Some planned not to appear, though they were proud that they were not in school. They began to talk, to think, to feel, about being helped by their approval. David began talking about his own contributions. ... because four generations of Canadians have come to depend on Imperial products on the road, on the farm, in the home

Imperial started supplying Canadians with oil products in the very early days of the industry in Canada... In fact, 1880 was the year it made its start as this business.

In most parts of Canada, it was as Imperial refinery which first began making oil products locally.

Imperial pioneered, too, in supplying Canadians with products when and where they were needed. (As far back as 1905, Imperial opened the first service station in Canada... and perhaps in the world.)

Today, as over the past 75 years, Imperial recognizes its responsibility in being Canada's most modern of oil products at the lowest possible price.

Earl and Helen Watson turn a B.C. business trip into a 5-day 'Centennial' holiday...with Hertz Rent A Car!

VANCOUVER WEDNESDAY "We reserved in advance — the beautiful Hertz Rent A Car we wanted was ready and waiting!"

HELEN'S HOLIDAY STARTS "For Helen, shopping and a Centennial fashion show. A full schedule of calls for me."

A VALUABLE EVENING "Good of Haines to invite us home. Tomorrow, Mrs. Haines is showing Helen the town."

PORT MOODY THURSDAY "Drove 50-odd miles checking our refinery installations. My Hertz Rent A Car made it easy."

VICTORIA-NANAIMO "Government calls on Friday. Overnight with Helen's cousins in Nanaimo. Early ferry back."

FORT LANGLEY SATURDAY "Promise of a fine day . . . a day for pleasure. Drove out to Fort Langley — birthplace of B.C."

LEAVE SUNDAY "Can't beat personal calls in a business like mine . . . especially when you combine them with a wonderful vacation with the wife along too! Wouldn't have been possible without Hertz. It's done Helen a lot of good. What a lot of sense Hertz Rent A Car makes!"
